Copyright © 2020 InfoSpace Holdings, LLC, a Company of System1 #mynstructable4-iamSRKfan Hola chicos I have another very easy instructable for you, you can do for any science exhibition or science fair. I did this as a scientific exhibition project. In this instructible, I will explain the circuit of the device, you can see the circuit schematic in the image. Components :1) A 9v 2 battery) an LED bulb3) two crocodile clips 4) cables5) paper clips6) a board to make the game board, you have to attach the same no. from paper clips to both edges of the board, put pieces of paper under the paper clips. Write down all the questions on one side and all your answers on the other side in a confusing way (such as matching the following). Turn around and connect all paper clips of questions to the paper clip of their respective answers. This way the questions and their answers are electrically connected. That's it and now you have to follow the scheme, you can select the question and answer using the crocodile clips. When the correct answer is connected to the question, because they are wired the electricity is allowed to pass and the circuit is completed and the light is turned on otherwise not. Select your question and the answer and the light will turn on. You can even connect a buzzer, but it consumed too much energy and didn't allow the bulb to turn on properly, so I removed it as I didn't have much time, so I avoided the use of resistors and capacitors.
